Specific and familiarisation training is crucial following the completion of basic training as it bridges the gap between foundational knowledge and specific workplace application. While basic training equips individuals with general skills and principles, specific job and familiarisation training hones these skills to meet the unique demands of their roles, ensuring precision and efficiency. This also ensures full adherence to the requirements of the Approved Code of Practice (L117).

Conversion training must be considered when transitioning from one machine to another if there are significant differences in operation, controls, or functionality. This ensures operators are fully competent, reducing the risk of errors and maintaining safety and efficiency in the workplace.

COURSE DURATION MATRIX (MINIMUM TRAINING DURATIONS) v36.0526

If training does not meet the durations shown in the matrix below, the training may not be registered through NORS (unless prior authorisation has been granted). Please note we update the matrix from time to time so please check back regularly for the latest version. The 'Reductions per Course' shown below are calculated on the maximum course ratio. Adjustments to these timings will require amending for courses with reduced ratios; for instance, a 3-hour reduction for 3:1:1 would become 2 hours for 2:1:1 and 1 hour for 1:1:1. For any queries please contact the Quality Assurance Team (qa@rtitb.com / 01952 520215) who will be happy to help.

Important Information

- The durations listed are the minimum total training and testing times and are not the total time the candidate(s) spends at the venue (breaks, lunch etc. are not included).
- 'Conversion to' options, shown in the table below, are only applicable when there are significant similarities in skill and knowledge requirements between the truck that an operator is converting from and the truck that the operator is converting to. In particular, there should be a clear overlap between the 2 courses syllabi. The candidate's previous operating experience and aptitude must also be considered when deciding if a conversion course is an appropriate route. (Note: refer to the RTITB 'Conversion List' for further assistance).
- Please remember these are the minimum hours only. Some candidates may need longer. Training durations should be extended where required.
